Amputee claims misdiagnosis at hospital

STORIES: RADHICA DE SILVA
radhica.sookraj@guardian.co.tt

Seven years ago doctors at the San Fernando General Hospital amputated part of Cheryl Paul's foot saying she had diabetes.

Since then, Paul said her foot has been oozing painfully, making her incapacitated.

Paul was speaking at the Southwest Regional Health Authority's public board meeting held at City Hall auditorium on Thursday.

Wiping away tears, Paul said she was petrified about returning to the hospital saying the doctor in question never took a blood test from her before he mistakenly diagnosed her with diabetes.

"The doctor told me I would be dead by morning if I did not sign the papers for amputation. It was only after I consulted with a private doctor later that I found out I was never diabetic. Look at my foot. Up to now it oozing. I spend $14,000 a year on medicine. My hair dropping, they damage my body. I cannot walk properly," Paul said.

Chief executive officer of the SWRHA Gall Miller-Meade told Paul she sympathised with her. She promised to investigate her complaint and contact her next week.

In her address, Miller-Meade admitted that the SWRHA faced challenges in maintaining optimum standards.

She said, "This was in no small part due to our ageing infrastructure and equipment, lack of foreign exchange and rising maintenance costs."

She said SWRHA had already started commissioning a team to review the hospital's infrastructure.

"The new Point Fortin hospital will be commissioned in the third quarter of 2019. She also said the neonatal unit has been renovated and endoscopy services have resumed.

"Our enhanced haemodialysis service will be commissioned within this quarter with increased capacity to ensure that more patients receive treatment," Miller-Meade said. She also said the MRI department has also been upgraded.

Director of Health Dr Albert Persaud also said SWRHA has upgraded retinopathy screening.

"We have screened 10,000 people and of that number, we saved the sight of 780 people who were certain to go blind."

He said the hospital now has more beds for the cardiology department and 341 cataract surgeries have been completed from March to April this year.

Persaud said 4,737 babies were successfully delivered between 2016 and 2017 with only three maternal deaths.

"We had difficulties with the neonatal unit with respect to infection in the unit and we have done a complete redesign and overhaul of the unit to reduce infectivity," Persaud added.

He also said 1,653 joint replacement units were done and the hospital was now taking care of half of T&T's cancer patients.

However, Persaud fell out of favour with the audience when he said the pharmacy did not have a drug shortage.

Resident Alwyn Bedeau said basic medication like panadol and metformin was not available. Nizam Hassanali said basic blood tests could not be done.

Persaud said he checked with the regional manager of pharmaceuticals who confirmed that there was no chronic shortage of drugs.

He said sometimes there were hiccups in getting supplies from Nipdec's C-40 central stores warehouse at Chagaramas.

No $ for Cedros couple's wedding

The wedding between fisherman Awardnath Hajarie and his intended wife is off because there is no money for the occasion. Hajarie and his common-law wife Heematie Sanker were scheduled to be wed next month after being together for 27 years.

In an interview yesterday, Hajarie said he hoped to go back to the sea to make some money for the wedding but his fishing boat is still impounded in Venezuela. Asked why the vessel had not been returned, an upset Hajarie replied, "You go and ask the Minister of National Security that question."

He said since he returned to Trinidad last week, he has been facing financial difficulties.

"Our family is helping us out but things are really hard...It frustrating," Hajarie said.

He added that emotionally he was not ready to go back to the sea but because of their financial constraints he had to continue working.

"I don't know why they still have the boat there. That was really disappointing. We heard that the Venezuelan authorities were waiting to get a document from our Ministry of National Security but they have not received it and the boat is still down there," Hajarie said. He said he was hoping that corporate T&T could assist them.

"I know my wife was looking forward to the wedding. It really hard to do that now but if anyone wants to help us, we will be happy," Hajarie said.

Hajarie, 52, son Nicholas, 26, and friend Shammil Seepersad, 36, went fishing aboard a pirogue off Cedros on April 5, when they were arrested by the Guardia Nacional. A Trinmar worker captured footage of the Guardia Nacional chasing the pirogue in T&T waters where the fishermen were arrested.

Following the arrests, the Government was criticised for not assisting the Cedros fishermen. Minister Dillon later said the fishermen could have returned if they wanted to as they had a Certificate of Abandonment from the Venezuelan authorities. However, the men remained stranded for 16 days as they were unable to get fuel to return.

JTUM wants migrant workers's policy

YVONNE WEBB

THE deepening Venezuela crisis and migration of a substantial percentage of its 30 million residents, some to Trinidad and Tobago, has propelled the Joint Trade Union Movement (JTUM) to call on government to fast track its migrant workers' policy.

General secretary Ozzie Warwick said this government promised such a policy in its manifesto, but three years after assuming office, no such policy exists. Warwick said the real issue facing Venezuelans in TT is exploitation of migrant workers by unscrupulous individuals, agencies and employers and has nothing to do with political asylum and refugees status.

The trade unionist said he is disturbed by the silence of international bodies such as Amnesty International and the United Nations on the exploitation of the migrants, considering they were quick to pronounce on the breach of protocol involved in the recent repatriation of 82 Spanish speaking nationals, some of whom were seeking asylum here.

Warwick said these were economic migrants seeking a better life in this country due to the hardship in theirs. He said it is an established fact that across the world wherever there is an economic crisis, there would be migration of people towards a better life.

"These Venezuelan nationals arrived here based on false promises of asylum so they can access social benefits, only to be faced with the reality of exploitation through low wages as well as physical, economic and sexual abuse.

"Any person would be easily lured to greener pastures once faced with grave financial circumstances. It happened to us during the 1990s when many Trinidadians sought political asylum in Canada due to so called "economic persecution" by the then Government," Warwick recalled.

He blamed Venezuela's economic crisis on US imposed sanctions, the failing oil prices and the challenge posed by the country's upper and business class to the economic policies of President Nicolas Maduro and his predecessor Hugo Chavez. He said had the PNM instituted a migrant workers' policy, as it promised, there would be no contention or question on the issue of the treatment of migrant workers.

"Not to mention that it has opened the doors for human trafficking. The Government is now called upon to make haste in finalizing a migrant workers' policy which would protect the rights and treatment of migrant workers."
